GETTING STARTED

We welcome your interest in participating in eCommons, which is an important piece of Loyola University’s mission, as well as a great way to get your scholarly work noticed and cited. (See this page for complete details on why to contribute.) eCommons is a full-text database of Loyola produced scholarly material including all media types including text, image, and video.

Submitting Material
The easiest way to get started with eCommons is to enter the items you wish to submit into the Faculty Activity System. Just select “yes” for the option asking about inclusion in eCommons. You can edit any items you have posted already to indicate that you wish to include this item in eCommons. Your subject specialist or the eCommons administrator will contact you in 1-2 months to let you know that we have posted the item or to request the version that we may post.

You may submit articles, conference presentations, or any other scholarly material to eCommons at any time through the eCommons interface. If you are submitting a journal article, we request that you submit your author’s accepted manuscript. If we may post the published version, we will make the substitution for you. Usually checking copyright permissions, editing the metadata, and verifying the submission file take 1-2 weeks.

If you would like something to be posted immediately, please email it to ecommons@luc.edu. We generally are able to post items within 1 business day assuming we do not have to check copyright permissions.

SelectedWorks
Some publishers do not permit any use of articles in institutional repositories. In this case, we can start a SelectedWorks profile for you and include links to any articles that we are not able to post in eCommons. We ask that you submit your full text work to eCommons first, and then use the collection tool in SelectedWorks to grab those citations (this will include citations that live in other repositories that run on the same software). You can edit this page to create a sophisticated research profile that includes all your work. Your subject specialist or the eCommons administrator can help you with this process.

Need Help?
You can always contact your subject specialist or the eCommons administrator at ecommons@luc.edu. We also have a list of frequently asked questions and other information on the eCommons site.
